Genoua, November 16. N. S.

THE Duke of Mantua came the 9th Inſtant from Caſal to the Palace of the Prince of Centurione, in this City, attended by a Guard of ſixty Horſe, who, as ſoon as he was entred into the Town, drew their Swords, and marched before him, with the ſame State as if he was Sovereign Lord of this Country, which undecent Behaviour, in a Republick that is ſo jealous of her Liberty as this is, occaſioned a great deal of Murmuring. On the 11th the King of Spain, having left Milan 5 days before, came to the Palace of the Duke of Spinola, in the Suburb of San Pietro d'Arena, about half a mile from hence; he was ſaluted with a treble Diſcharge of the Cannon of this City, and had other Honours paid him that are uſual on the like extraordinary Occaſions. The Doge and Senate went the ſame day to compliment him on his ſafe Arrival, and were very well received by him, the King giving to the Doge the Title of Highneſs, and to the Republick that of Moſt Serene, and allowing the Doge and the Senators to be covered in his Preſence. That night a Fire happened in the Marquis of Doria's Palace at San Pietro d'Arena, where ſome French Officers lodged, by the Negligence of their Servants, and the Damage it did is computed at 40000 Dollars. The 12th the Doge and Senate made the King a ſecond Viſit in great State; the Doge was carried in a very rich Sedan, and the Senators in Litters, followed by the Nobility in their Coaches, and before the Doge marched 24 young Noblemen on Horſeback, all very richly cloathed, their Horſes finely accoutred, and attended with many Servants in rich Liveries, which made a very glorious Show. An Opera was acted here, which was intended for his Diverſion, but he did not come to it. The 13th he dined publickly, and afterwards came into this City, accompanied by ths Duke of Mantua, the Prince of Vaudemont Governor of Milan, and the Cardinal d'Eſtrees; and attended by the Doge's Guards, and 200 Dragoons, he went directly to St. Lawrence's Church, where he ſtaid about an hour, and then returned to his Palace: There was an Opera and a Ball here for his Entertainment, but he appeared at neither, having that day received a Courier from Spain, with the News that the Engliſh Fleet had taken and deſtroyed the French Ships and Spaniſh Galeons at Vigo, which made him very melancholly. The 15th the Gallies were ordered to be in a readineſs for his embarking, and the Doge and Senate were on their way to take their Leave of him, when a Meſſenger met them, who was ſent by the King to acquaint them, that he had put off his Departure till the next day. It was obſerved, that he had altered his Reſolution upon the Receipt of an Expreſs from Milan, which had viſibly increaſed the Concern he had upon him for the mortifying News which he had received from Spain. The 16th, the Weather being extreamly fair, the Gallies were ordered out of the Mould; the Doge, Senate, and others of the Nobility, went to wiſh him a good Voyage, and coduct him to his Gally. Accordingly they accompanied him to the Sea-ſide, where a Bridge of Boats had been laid from the Shore to his Gally, for his greater Conveniency of embarking; but as they were about half way over this Bridge, that part of it which was neareſt the Gally gave way, and was carried off by the Stream, ſo they were forced to come back, and make uſe of Boats. When the Gallies were under Sail, the Patrone or Admiral gave 3 Guns, and all the Cannon round the Town was four times diſcharged; And in leſs than two hours the Gallies were out of ſight, to the great Satisfaction of the People here, to whom it gave no ſmall Apprehenſions, to ſee ſo ſtrong a Squadron of Gallies in their Port, and the King of Spain, with a ſtrong Guard of French Soldiers, and many other Foreigners, ſo near them, inſomuch that they had increaſed the Guards of the City to thrice the number they were before, had mounted more Cannon on their Walls, ſhut up ſeveral of their Gates, and taken all the neceſſary Precautions to prevent a Surpriſe.
